M. Roguet presents his respects to The Marquis of Anglesea, and hastens to express to His Excellency the deep regret which he experienced, on being last evening informed, that the box which he had promised to be at the Palace stairs, at the midnight preceding, was not sent at the appointed hour. Owing to a mistake in the language of the interpretation of the note written by M Roguet to Commodore Biddle, which he did not retain a copy, the time was misunderstood, and the box was not sent until yesterday morning at half past 8 o'clock to the designated place, where it remained for two hours.

M Raguet takes upon him=self the whole blame of this dis=appointment, which has been to him a source of mortification and chagrin, which he can hard=ly find words to express. He trusts however, that as no positive in=convenience resulted from this mistake, owing to the vessel's not having sailed as expected, this explanation will be taken by His Excellency as a satisfac=tory apology accompanied as it is by the assurance, that M. Raguet will recommend to the master of the Corvo, to take charge of any despatches entrusted to his care, previous to his departure.

M Raguet repeats to His Ex=cellency upon this occasion, the as=surance of his esteem and respect.
